LEYS AND ORTHOTENY

It was Tony Wedd's booklet Skyways and Landmarks, putting forward the idea of a connection between leys and UFO sightings through Aime Michel's discovery of alignments of sightings which he called "orthoteny", which brought leys back into public notice in the 1960s. However, orthoteny subsequently fell out of favour for both ley hunters and UFOlogists, but there was some subsequent research by Ann Druffel in America that seems to validate it, and its connection with leys. It was the subject of a talk at the MUFON Annual UFO Symposium in 1983:

"A Southern California study of fifty-seven (57) UFO-related cases adds credence to the theory of orthoteny, first advanced by Aime Mchel. In this study, thirty-five (35) other events, comprising three comparison groups not related to the original theory of orthoteny, were also plotted. Four (4) ancient Indian ritual sites were included to see whether orthotenic lines seem to have any possible relation to ley line phenomena. The two other comparison groups, i.e., fourteen (14) UFOs and seventeen (17) well-investigated events of interest to professional psychic researchers, were added to the study in order to demonstrate their random nature, as compared to the orthotenic (straight-line) groupings of UFO events.

"The study includes fifty-seven (57) locations within an 18,000-square mile area of Southern California where UFO events were reported by citizens of average or above-average observing ability. These locations include twenty-seven (27) sites where CE I and CE II events allegedly occurred, eight (8) sites of UFO landing reports and/or abduction scenarios, and thirteen (13) incidents of reported contact with "alien" entities during which no UFO-class vehicles were visible to the witnesses. Nine (9) additional cases of ufological content and high strangeness which, for one reason or another, did not fit into the other classifications comprised the fourth UFO group.

"The purpose of this study was to determine whether or not UFO sightings and entity reports in Southern California lay along orthotenic lines. My initial interest in this subject stemmed from two factors. First, for the past twenty-nine years in France, the United States, South America, the United Kingdom and other countries had found the straight-line phenomenon held true in their own areas. Second, I had accidentally discovered an orthotenic line, composed of six (6) points, during a study of local UFO sightings. This particular project involved plotting twenty-five (25) sighting locations on an aeromagnetic map of Los Angeles and Orange Counties. At that time, I was not looking for straight-line phenomena, but rather correlations between UFO sightings and magnetic anomalies in earth terrain.

"This accidentally-discovered straight-line stretched from Yorba Linda in the southeast section of Orange County into the city of Montrose in the northeast portion of the Los Angeles Basin. For the next several years I tried to find the time to continue the study in order to see whether other straight lines would appear from the plotting of the sites of other UFO CE II's and CE III's and landing reports or if additional reports would be found to lie along the Yorba Linda-Montrose line. A full study was time-consuming, and the opportunity to do it was not found until now.

"Coral and Jim Lorenzen of the Aerial Phenomena Research Organization (APRO) in Arizona found orthotenic lines in the United States and South America. Other researchers, notably Drs. David R. Saunders and Jacques Vallee added strength to the theory by plotting great-circle lines over portions of the United States and other countries, and publishing the results of their analyses in various articles and books.

"Throughout these subsequent years of study, however, researchers (including Michel himself), had noticed that orthoteny did not hold true only for sightings involving one particular date. Orthotenic lines of UFO activity were found on which numerous sightings occurred over a time span of many years. The most famous of these is BAVIC, originally a six-point line extending from Bayonne to Vichy, France. Although the six original sightings all occurred on September 24, 1954, subsequent study has revealed other cases of high strangeness occurring on other dates along the BAVIC line. In addition, it has been found that other remarkable phenomena sites, such as the location of Magdalenian cave art containing paintings of definite UFO shapes, lie along the BAVIC line. BAVIC, of course, has been extended, by research, far beyond its original Bayonne-Vichy limits and now constitutes a great circle line.

"Gradually, the theory of orthotenic lines has become less a matter of controversial discussion. Conversely, over the last ten years, the study of so-called "ley lines" has become popular. Ley line study indicates that the location of ancient sites of ceremonial and religious ritual, such as Stonehenge, lie along straight lines as well. This theory was first advanced by Alfred Watkins in the 1920s, but much of the credit for upgrading ley-line data is due to Paul Devereux, editor of the magazine The Ley Hunter. A recent book by Devereux and Ian Thomson postulates a UFO-ancient sites (leys) link. Evidence of this is not yet strong. There is no demonstrated proof that ley lines and orthotenic lines are in any way associated with each other, but the fact remains that UFOs, especially in the United Kingdom and some European countries, are seen over, or in the general area of leys.

"The study of ley lines, however, is now well past the theory point. Evidence that ancient or prehistoric cultures built their important places of ceremonial worship along straight lines (or, in the case of the longer lines spanning more than one country such as those discovered by Michel, along great-circle routes), is fully established.

"One hypotheses which tries to explain ley lines states that these sites were chosen by ancient peoples because of some inherent telluric property of the terrain along which these ceremonial sites were built. The specific earth energy (or property) believed to be involved in ley lines and ley sites is not yet identified.

"Ley lines have been demonstrated to exist on most continents. Numerous ancient cultures seem to have employed this principle. Even today, many of our more modern major sites of ritual (churches, mosques, synagogues, and other centers of metaphysical study) are built on ruins of ancient religious buildings and, therefore, still lie on ley lines.

"During the past four years, through various coincidences, I became aware of four Southern California sites of ancient ceremonial interest, used long ago by members of various American Indian tribes. When I began my orthotenic study of Southern California UFO reports, these four Indian sites were included and plotted on the same map to see if their locations had any correlations with UFO reports. These four sites became a comparison group in the study, along with two other comparison groups (see below), making a total of thirty-five (35) comparison cases to be plotted along with the fifty-seven (57) selected high-strangeness UFO reports.

"The four American Indian ritual sites were: Tahquitz Rock near Idyllwild; Eagle Rock in the city of Eagle Rock (Los Angeles 90041), Stony Point in Chatsworth, and Castle Rock in Park. Of these, Tahquitz Rock and Stony Point are protected by governmental authorities and are still generally in their primeval state. Eagle Rock and Castle Rock, being on or adjacent to private lands, are being encroached upon by human habitation, but still manage to maintain their historical interest and beauty.

"When these four sites were plotted with navy blue flags, it became apparent that three of them, i.e., Tahquitz Rock, Eagle Rock and Stony Point, lay in a straight line across terrain one hundred and sixteen (116) air miles long. Castle Rock lay five and one-half ( $5\frac{1}{2}$ ) miles southwest of Stony Point. Although, for purposes of this study, three-point UFO related lines were ignored as coincidental, it was felt that it might be more than coincidental that three out of the four Indian sites in this study could be connected by a straight line of this length. This finding was accepted as preliminary evidence that these three Indian sites might form the equivalent of a "ley line" as found in other countries.

"RESULTS OF STUDY AND UFOLOGICAL SIGNIFICANCE: After all of the fifty-seven (57) UFO-related sites had been plotted, a rigid wooden yardstick was used to determine which cases lay along straight-line routes. The criterion for ufological significance was four (4) or more sites of UFO significance lying in a straight line across the map. In all, sixteen (16) straight lines comprised of four (4) or more points were discovered. Of these sixteen lines, two (2) had seven (7) points, four (4) had six (6) points, three (3) had five (5) points and seven (7) had four (4) points. The sixteen (16) lines extended over varying distances, ranging from one hundred and twenty-eight (128) miles to twenty-four (24) miles.

"In charting these lines, a deviation of five-eighths ( $\frac{5}{8}$ ) of a mile was deemed acceptable, since in orthotenic studies deviations up to a kilometer on one side of a line was deemed a "good fit." If it is assumed that orthotenic or ley lines represent some type of earth energy, then logically there would be some width to the energy field involved. Therefore, an arbitrary figure of approximately 3,500 feet was judged reasonable for purposes of this study. Deviations of this distance, however, were rare, comprising no more than five to ten percent (5-10%) of the total plottings.

"Of the sixteen (16) ufologically significant lines, three (3) had Indian sites lying upon them. The most striking line of Indian sites, i.e., Tahquitz Rock, Eagle Rock, and Stony Point, had three sites of ufological interest lying at various locations on it. [Even though groups of three UFO events in a line were otherwise ignored as insignificant, this line was kept as possibly meaningful.]

"RESULTS OF PLOTTING OF COMPARISON GROUPS: The addition of the remaining two comparison groups (IFOs and paranormal events), when plotted on the map, yielded interesting results. Except for those four instances where paranormal events had occurred at the same locations as UFO incidents, the pink flags had been expected to show non-correlation with the straight lines of ufological significance. However, of the total number of seventeen (17) paranormal events plotted, nine (9) lay on lines of ufological significance. Seven (7) others lay on lines of "combined interest" (see text below.) The one exception lay within a mile of an existing line.

"The most surprising result of the study was the discovery that ten (10) of the IFO group (plotted with green flags) lay along lines of ufological significance. The remaining four (4) lay along lines of so-called combined interest.

"One particular IFO sighting, a gross misidentification of Venus as a "flaming orb which repeatedly zoomed toward a witness's roof" was located where three lines intersected. Two of these lines were of ufological significance, the other a "combined interest" line. There is no ready explanation why gross misidentifications should be located along straight lines, since the IFO group was purposely chosen at the beginning of the study as a comparison group, the plotting of which would not logically be expected to have any correlation with purportedly genuine UFO activity. It is speculated here that the terrain associated with orthotenic or ley lines does contain some as-yet-unidentified type of telluric (earth) energy which is in some unknown way associated with the manifestation and/or propulsive power of UFOs. It is also speculated that the same earth energy might have the ability to influence the physiology of human witnesses, (including their physical, mental and emotional makeup), so that in the vicinity of orthotenic lines conventional objects might be mistaken for what they actually are.

"COMBINED INTEREST" LINES: In addition to the sixteen (16) lines of ufological significance (comprised of 4 to 7 points each), seven (7) additional lines were discovered on the map. None of these contained the required 4 or more ufological locations to fit into

Extraterrestrials Already Here

CNN's announcement of the government's allocation of $100 million to NASA for searching out life on other planets was a surprise. That's a lot of money to spend on something "that's not there." The evidence is overwhelming that they are here. They have been here, and they are not going away.

There is definitely a government cover-up, maybe for good reasons. I can think of three: political, religious and scientific.

They (extraterrestrials) are thousands of years ahead of us in many areas. Evidence of their coming to Earth and being worshipped as gods goes back more than 450,000 years, and this story is carved on the Sumerian cuneiform tablets and in great stone megaliths the world over.

The pyramids are significant and where my wife, Connie, and I gave two lectures in Calro to hundreds of wonderful people. Our lectures in Sweden and Norway were well-received. There have been many sightings there.

At the Royal Academy of Science and Engineering in Stockholm, I showed clips of a movie of a spacecraft landing and people getting out. In 1956, an FBI agent and others witnessed this event as told in "The High Bridge Incident," our latest book. After 30 years of being shushed up, it can now be told. In those days, I had very little support. But now, some great scholars have done some research and their books are worth reading.

Zecharia Sitchin ("The 12th Planet") says, "If you believe in the Bible, then you must believe in the possibilities of UFOs."

He is right. The Bible is full of landings and contacts with higher beings. Our lectures explain in common logic, photos, slides and electronic devices, the evidence of higher beings who came here a long time ago. They are still coming. They are our ancestors. Believe it or not!

Extraterrestrials Gain Acceptance

Thank you for publishing Howard Menger's letter on extraterrestrials, June 18. A few years ago it would have been treated with derision, but now the government has admitted the possible existence of space vehicles and the people are beginning to realize that other life could exist on other planets.

There have been thousands of sightings all over the world and it has been stated that our government has spacecrafts in their possession. In fact, our latest state-of-the-art Stealth plane could be made from a similar material as it resists detection from radar. Also, there is an American automobile on the market, the Saturn, with many of these high-tech features.

I purchased and read Mr. Menger's book, "The High Bridge Incident." Though I have read many books on this subject for years, I find that this one is the most graphic and detailed I have read to date.

Extraterrestrials Part Of Religion

Bravo, Susan Sunset and Jana Salmon-Heyneman for the informative article about UFOs Saturday in "Lifestyle." This is one more spoke of information in the wheel of progress on the road to truth and enlightenment.

While lecturing, showing movie clips and slides in Calro, Egypt, on the subject, in the shadow of the pyramids, we met a wonderful gentleman and scholar, G.C. Schellhorn ("Extraterrestrials and Bible Prophecy") who supported us. My June 18 letter to the editor says it all. The response was gratifying. People are seeing the light.

In 1950, hundreds of people near High Bridge, N.J., witnessed crafts in flight. Some saw a landed craft. Angello beings disembarked and greeted me in full view of the witnesses.

I suggest reading Rev. Billy Graham's book, "Angels." He reportedly said, "I believe there is intelligent life in outer space and that these beings probably look like us." Also, read Rev. Barry Downings' book, "The Bible and Flying Saucers."

Another time a craft landed in High Bridge (pre-arranged for witnesses) it took off without anyone disembarking because there were locals waiting for the occupants with shotguns, pistols, knives, and one man had a grenade. Is it any wonder they don't land on the White House lawn?

There are many religions worldwide and most of them tell (though their sacred scriptures) of divine messages and instructions coming from gods of the sky. We are told they are "angelic" in appearance and give laws to mankind of how to live in peace and harmony.

Moses gave divine laws and was taken "up in a cloud." Buddha's message was one of love and compassion. Jesus taught us to love one another. He also said "In my father's house there are many mansions." Does he mean other planets, other dimensions?

our protocol criterion of non-coincidence but six (6) out of seven (7) of these additional lines had four (4) or more points when the UFO sites, paranormal incidents, and Indian sites were combined on each."

SPOKES IN THE WHEEL

by Gordon Harris

In 'Ties that Bind'<sup>1</sup>, I described several linear phenomena of different kinds, on different continents, which have a common characteristic, i.e. straight lines radiating from points. In two examples mentioned, the words used by other reporters to describe this characteristic were "like the spokes of a wheel". In fact, I missed a couple of others, for in Tony Morrison's book, Pathways to the Gods, a photograph of some of the lines of Nasca, Peru, is captioned "Many lines begin at centres, like spokes on a wheel hub". Also, in his article 'Mystery roads in Puerto Rico',<sup>2</sup> Richard Druit wrote "A very special feature of Tibes is the solar court, a large sun-like representation with five existing spokes and evidence of more originally".

In 'Leys as Old Straight Tracks'<sup>3</sup>, I quoted Percival Lowell's description of the lines he saw on the planet Mars at the turn of the century, the so-called 'canals'. He was clearly describing the same characteristic. Pursuing this lead further, I recently read The Planet Observer's Handbook by F.W.Price<sup>4</sup>. A significant aspect of this book is that Price is an amateur astronomer, albeit a professor of biology/biochemistry. So he describes many observations made by fellow amateurs, some of which are regarded as contentious by professionals. Imagine a book on archaeology containing serious discussion of Alfred Watkins' theory of The Old Straight Track. Apparently there is another issue in astronomy which is almost as contentious as the 'canals' of Mars. Believe it or not, it is referred to as 'the spoke system of Venus'. I quote from Price's book:

"Percival Lowell reported seeing linear features on Venus, in particular a pattern of linear dusky features radiating from the subsolar point like the spokes of a wheel and was first to sketch them in 1896 ... His observations were verified by Foulkes in 1897 ... Griffiths saw and sketched the spoke system on February 17th, 1897.

"No-one else seems to have studied the spokes or even remembered them until Baum 'rediscovered' them in 1951. He saw them as Lowell did ... What is interesting is that Baum had not read any of Schiaparelli's or Lowell's writing on Venus, which argues strongly for the reliability of his observation."<sup>5</sup>

Now it is known that Venus is covered with multiple layers of dense cloud, so that its surface can never be seen. The 'spokes' thus appear to be a phenomenon occurring in the Venusian atmosphere, which is very dense and subject only to sluggish movement. The planet also has a negligible magnetic field, so what the lines are is a mystery. However, Price makes a significant comment on this mystery in the following paragraph:

"Usually nothing is revealed when the planet is photographed in visible or infrared light, but diffuse markings become visible in ultra-violet, which must be due to " ultra-violet-absorbing material in the clouds ...a few people possess some visual sensitivity to UV light and it is probably those who can see the so-called ultra-violet markings"<sup>6</sup>.

This comment may well be relevant to the Martian 'canal' mystery. In Price's chapter on Mars<sup>7</sup>, he mentions twenty observers who have seen its canals to various degrees, adding: "The reality of the canals seems to be supported by the fact that different observers see the same canals in the same positions on the Martian disc, but there are many exceptions. This makes it fairly likely that they are not products of imagination or wishful seeing."

Yet with reference to the pictures of the Martian surface taken by the Mariner 4 spacecraft in 1965, he added: "There was no trace of canals. Their existence was thus finally disproved."

Perhaps he was too hasty. These pictures were taken by cameras sensitive only to visible light and he does not mention the lines detected by Mariner 9 in 1971 and Viking Orbiter in 1976. I have written<sup>8</sup> about how the canal myth came about due to misuse of the Italian word canale, meaning 'channel' or 'groove'. What if the the lines seen by Lowell and others really were shallow grooves, like the lines of Nasca, and easily obliterated by wind-blown dust? In that case, like the old roads of Chaco Canyon, they would only be detectable in infra-red. It may then be relevant that in 'The Last Word' in New Scientist a correspondent wrote: "A friend of mine suggested that I am one of the few people whose eyes are infra-red sensitive"<sup>9</sup>. If this faculty is prevalent, is it the reason why, like the spoke system of Venus, some observers can see the 'canals' and others cannot?

In his section on Mercury, Price writes: "Prince saw a bright spot a little south of the centre of the disc with faint lines radiating from it on June 11th, 1867" ... "He [Lowell] made several drawings of Mercury showing linear canal-like features"<sup>10</sup>.

But it is in his section on the satellites of Jupiter that Price mentions linear markings that are clear and irrefutable, even to the professionals: "The distant low-resolution pictures taken by Voyager 1 revealed Europa's surface to be marked by a multitude of criss-crossing linear markings. Higher resolution pictures taken by Voyager 2 showed these features to be not cracks in the crust, as first thought, but purely surface markings."

Referring to these markings in his book Planetary Landscapes, Professor R. Greeley wrote: "Global views of Europa display numerous linear features, some of which radiate from central spots. These form patterns which bear a remarkable similarity to maps of Mars showing fanciful networks of canals."

Since the canali were described as being geometrically straight<sup>12</sup>, only one conclusion can be drawn from these observations. It is that Europa's icy mantle is covered with a network of straight tracks, some of which radiate from points. Nasca on ice, so to speak! It seems remarkable to me that other bodies in the solar system display linear features having the same characteristics as those on Earth. In a letter to The Ley Hunter 117, and at Northern Earth's 1993 'Straight Debate' at Bradford University<sup>13</sup>, I suggested that linear features on Earth have an extra-terrestrial origin. In view of the above, is this idea so crazy? If the next Observer spacecraft, carrying high resolution infra-red cameras, is more successful than the last, we will know the answer in about two years' time.

Gordon Harris' paper was published in NE 55, along with views on alignment studies by the other participants in the debate, including Philip Heselton, who suggested that linearity functions as an archetype in nature and derives a sacred credo from that, which appears in leys and other ritual alignments. The discovery of linear features on other worlds, or even such anomalies as the infra-red-visible lines that appeared in the Australian Desert, which we reported in NE 60, would seem to support this notion. ## LETTERS from Gordon Harris, Frodsham, Cheshire

As an Old Straight Track man I was pleased when I read Touchstone No.89 containing a dozen or so descriptions of leys running along 'coincident' stretches of road, track or path. In flat or low lying areas of this country I have also found leys running along 'coincident' stretches of rivers and streams. This made me wonder if leys were made by something heavy, perhaps a vehicle of some sort, which made such deep ruts in soft low lying ground that the courses of rivers and streams were diverted along them. So I looked elsewhere for something which would support this idea and found it in S. America, see enclosed copy of 'Making Tracks' published in Northern Earth fourteen years ago. As also reported in N.E., I find that leys radiate in large numbers from nodal points, situated at stone circles or multiple junctions of roads, tracks and paths. When leys radiating from several such nodes are plotted on the same map they produce a systematic grid with multiple intersections. See 'Crossing the 't's', N.E.109. So I was delighted to read the extract from the article by Tom Brooks in Metro, suggesting such grids may have resulted from 'a sophisticated geometric version of a satnav based on stone circles and way markers'. Also, 'Such patterns could only have been the work of intelligent surveyors and planners, ....' I find it hard to believe that 'there were maths wizards among the ancient Britons 5,000-6,000 years ago.' What also needs to be taken into account is that radiating linear patterns have also been seen on the surfaces of other bodies in the solar system such as Mars, Venus, Mercury and Europa. See 'Spokes in the Wheel' in N.E.63, (printed above - JG). It seems much more likely to me that the intelligence required to produce such grids of tracks was extraterrestrial in origin and that several bodies in the solar system have been systematically surveyed by remotely guided machines. Would Tony Wedd have agreed with me, I wonder?

THE HIDDEN UNITY and BEGINNINGS

The Hidden Unity looks at the strange phenomenon of subconscious siting of ley points, and notes that places of worship, of all religions and all ages, tend to predominate on leys. The environmental and philosophical implications of this are discussed, and the apparent necessity of worship but irrelevance of doctrine. Two ley centres are given as examples, and investigated in depth - the Shah Jehan Mosque in Woking and the Guru Nanak Sikh Temple, Scunthorpe. There is an appendix by Eileen Grimshaw on the significance of the Pagan religion to this study. Illustrated with photographs, maps and line drawings. £2 plus 30p p&p from the Amskaya address. Please make cheques payable to J. Goddard.

Beginnings is about a series of potentially useful discoveries, mainly made by Jimmy Goddard over a period of about twenty years, but having some overlap with discoveries made by others. For various reasons, the investigations are all in their early stages, and some have not been continued. They include earth energy detection, natural antigravity, subconscious siting, ley width, and the solar transition effect. There is also a chapter on cognitive dissonance - a psychological factor which seems to have been at the root of all bigotry - scientific, religious and other - down the ages. The booklet is concluded with an account of the discovery of leys by Alfred Watkins. £2 plus 30p p&p from the Amskaya address. Please make cheques payable to J. Goddard.

EARTH PEOPLE, SPACE PEOPLE

In 1961, Tony Wedd produced a manuscript Earth Men, Space Men, detailing many claims of extraterrestrial contact. It was never published, and I had thought it was lost, though it has recently been located - Tony had given it to Timothy Good. To try to make up for the loss in a much more modest size, this booklet was prepared. As well as giving details of some of the more prominent contact claims, there are articles on the history of the STAR Fellowship and some of its personalities, evidence for life in the Solar System and investigation into extraterrestrial language.
